NEW FRIENDS AND OLD FRIENDS

Make new friends and keep the old.
one is Silver and the other Gold.

Make new friends, but keep the old; Those are silver, these are gold. New made friendship is like a new rose, Age will mellow and refine. Friendships that have stood the test - Time and change - are surely the best; Brow may wrinkle, hair grows grey, Friendships never know decay. For old friends, alas! may die, New friends must their place supply, Cherish friendship in your heart - New is good, but old is best; Make new friends, but keep the old; Those are silver, these are gold.

It was a Sunday night. Reena, a ninth grader, was packing her bag for school. Her exams just got over and it was time to get her answer scripts. After dinner she went to bed but she couldn't sleep. She was scared of getting low marks. Her dream was to stand first in class, but she was always second or third. She knew that she had done well this time and hoped that her dream would come true. Finally, she slept.

The next day in school, she was excited and scared. By the last hour of the day she got all her answer scripts except Mathematics. She was ahead of the boy second in line by a mark. Now, her heart was beating faster than ever. When her teacher gave her the answer script, she saw that she had secured full marks. She was very happy. Finally, her dream had come true.

HONESTY

Few minutes later, she realized her teacher had overlooked a mistake. She should have lost two marks. Now, she was in a big dilemma, whether to be a coward and cheat or gather courage and tell the truth. Ajith had got full marks too. He would stand first if she informed the teacher about the error. She was an honest girl, but at the same time she wanted to be first.

When hardly five minutes were left for the end of school, she told her teacher the truth. Though her dream was shattered, she was happy that she had been honest. This act of hers highly impressed her teachers. Though she didn't come first in class, she got a special mention in the school assembly and found a special place in her teachers' hearts.

THE GLASS BROKEN

The winter bites the warm feet
Cracking the glass broken by my heels
Can't hear the shouts and screams.
I turned around, walking away from the crowd.
Running made me feel guilty and weak
He knows how to handle thee, God's pleased
My heart is warm, completely free.
What might happen next is a mystery indeed.
I cared about the wind that made me feel pale
The blood from my ears stopped to bleed
A tear from my eyes felt comforting
Until it was left unheard of
'The Glass Broken'

THE HORRORS OF CAMP WORMWOOD

"Finally, we've reached!", my friend Josh said, as the bus entered the camp. It slowed down and stopped in front of a small metal shack. A wooden signboard beside the shack read: "Welcome to Camp Wormwood. Our aim: To give everyone a green thumb and teach them to respect nature". "Wormwood? What sort of name is that supposed to be?" I asked Josh. All he did was laugh.

Josh and I have been best friends since we were four years old. We had been sent to this summer camp to "learn the ways of nature", to quote my parents. I just wanted to go and Josh decided to join me. In any event, we would at least have each other if the camp was boring. After we got out of the bus, a group of people in their early twenties directed us to an open space in front of which a small wooden stage was placed. However, there was something strange about all of them. Some of them had a greenish tinge on their cheeks, some of their eyes had green retina, and a few girls even had green nails. It didn't look like it was nail polish. It looked more like a natural green colour. Before I could tell Josh any of this, a thin, old man with thick glasses walked towards the stage. He introduced himself as our scout master. He said that we would be divided into different groups. Luckily, Josh was in the same group as I was. Throughout the day, we underwent several difficult exercises, both physically and mentally. At the end of the day, I was dead tired. Our group master called us for a campfire story. It was a pretty cheesy story but still a quite interesting one. Apparently, the forest was home to a biologist called Wormwood.

The lab was named after the biologist. Wormwood was a place where the biologist would fuse animal and plant to create brutal amalgamations. One day the creatures revolted against their master and broke free of the lab. These creatures still wander in the woods in search of any camper who is out at night. After listening to the story, we all wished each other good night, and fell asleep.

Suddenly I woke up. I checked the time. It was 1.00 a.m. I had no idea why I had woken up. I decided to just sit outside our cabin. Maybe the cool air would help me fall asleep. As I stepped out, I saw a faint, yellow light in the distant darkness of the woods. Though it was faint, I was so fascinated by it that I rose and started walking towards it. I was attracted to it, like a moth drawn to a flame. Fortunately, I hit my head against a branch and fell. That seemed to knock some sense into me. I wanted to go back to the camp, but I had come so far. It would be a shame to go back. I cautiously walked towards the direction of the light, and saw something that I will never forget, something that would haunt me for the rest of my life.

It was a tree, about 25 feet in height, supported by four thick roots that acted like legs. It had a dark, gaping mouth with no teeth except for two silvery fangs. It had three wooden hands with sharp claws and multiple branches on its back, drooping downwards. There was a hole in its head, which appeared to be the source of the yellow light. It had a single red eye, filled with hatred and anger. It spoke to itself in some strange language. Suddenly, a handsome buck appeared in the clearing, hypnotized by the plant's light. In an instant, the creature grabbed the buck and sucked its blood with its silvery fangs. It then let out a violent belch and threw the buck down. I heard the sound of foot steps. I saw a girl walking towards the tree. I recognized her. Her name was Amanda Williams. She was also from our school. I had already witnessed the brutal death of a buck. I could not let my fellow student fall victim to the same fate.

With all the courage born out of fear, I ran screaming into the clearing. This surprised the tree creature, and its hold over Amanda weakened. The creature lashed out at me with one arm and sent me sprawling across the clearing. I saw that I was within reach of an axe that was embedded in a tree stump. I crawled towards it and tore it from the stump. I swung, took aim and threw the axe. It hit the creature in the chest. It let out an inhuman screech and fell down. I ran towards it, removed the axe from its chest, and brought it down on the creature's head. It stopped moving and went limp. I saw that there was a deep gash on my stomach. I got up only 10 minutes later by which time Amanda had snapped out of the effects of the light. We helped each other and limped back to the camp. The scout master found it hard to believe our tale, until he saw the body of the tree creature. We were all sent back to our homes. For a few days, everything was fine. Josh asked me to repeat the story for the millionth time. No one bullied us, and Amanda was suddenly very warm and friendly.
