SUMMER

Watching the sand dissolving in the sea,
And the daisies make friends with the bees.
Climbing random birch trees with scraped knees;
Playing hide and seek up in the tree.

Catching ladybugs in a jar,
Watching your enemy from afar
Hanging upside down on the monkey bars,
Eating a sandwich while thinking about Mars.
Feeling sad because you lost a dime,
Not marking the days because you lost track of time
So lost in a book, you don't hear the clock chime,
Then looking out of the window to see the garden
of limes.
Making cupcakes getting icing everywhere
Without the bother of braiding your hair
Entering a scary house on a dare
When the holidays are over,
You knew you were without care.

THE LIBRARY

Rummaging through the dusty shelves,
Searching for the priceless treasure of books
Into the cupboards, desks and drawers, I delve,
Peering inside them, I take a look.
A red, dust-covered dictionary,
Books on the sun, the sky, the trees;
But nothing seems to suit me more
Than anything; I have read before.
Vibrant colours and bold shades
Thought-provoking titles and enchanting tales
And yet, I sit and ponder alone
As I decide on which book to take home.

THE LITTLE BIRD

Priyanka is an enthusiastic learner who exhibits a positive outlook and attitude in the classroom. She is courteous, has incredible self-discipline, and always completes her work with complete perfection. Priyanka has a vibrant imagination and excels in creative writing. Here she expresses her idea through the poem "The Little Bird".

There was once a tiny bird,
With tiny tiny wings.
He would play all day,
On see-saws, slides and swings.
"Hurray!" he would say,
With a newspaper in his hands,
And there he flew, up above,
Over the sea and land.
He would eat all day,

Saying "Yum yum",
And then would run and play again,
Like a mad or dumb.
At night he would go to bed,
Tired and exhausted,
And fall asleep as soon as,
His back touches the bed.
This continues daily,
But he never gets bored.
Even if anybody scolds him,
He still remains bold.

RICHNESS OF VEDIC SCIENCE

We can cite innumerable instances from the Vedas which illustrate concepts similar to those from modern science. Modern scientists are wonder-struck at these striking similarities. They cannot even imagine how such truths were written down at a time when there were no sophisticated sources of information. A few examples showing similarities in the knowledge obtained from modern science and the Vedic scriptures are given here.

Srimad Bhagavatam describes, "This planet earth is considered to be Bhoogol (Bhoo means planet earth and Gol means round) and it has Sapta Dweep (seven continents/seven islands)". Modern science, using satellite technology concluded that our planet is a sphere, not flat.

In the Ramayana, it is described how Ravana would fly from one place to another in a spacecraft called Pushpaka-Vimana. The Wright brothers were thus not the original inventors of the airplane!

Modern medical science has invented instruments to check embryo growth during pregnancy, but the Srimad Bhagavatam, 3rd Canto, 31st Chapter gives a vivid description of the same in the embryology section of Gray's Anatomy. There are incredible similarities in the information obtained from the two sources.

The Mahabharata describes an incident where the great sage Vyasadeva instructed Gandhari to place the pieces of her miscarried embryo in 100 Ghee pots and that is how the hundred Kauravas were born. Dr. B.G. Matapurkar, a surgeon with Maulana Azad Medical College, New Delhi states, "They not only knew about test tube babies and embryo splitting but also had the technology to grow human fetuses outside the body of a woman – something that is not known to modern science".

The Vedas state that cow dung, despite being an animal's stool, is pure. It was only in 1940 that the antiseptic qualities of cow dung were discovered.

The Vedas have stated since time immemorial that plants have life. But until Jagadish Chandra Bose proved that plants have feelings, scientists believed that they were inanimate.

The Kurukshetra war involved many subtle celestial weapons like shabdabhedhi, vayavya, parthavya, bhaumya, anthardana etc. which were far more sophisticated than the gross weapons known to scientists today!

In a similar way, much of the information that we have today has already been explained in the Vedas. It is time we start giving the Vedas their due, with respect to the knowledge they disburse. Values Plus team

LORD KRISHNA - THE DEFENDER OF DHARMA

Note-(This is written in the first person. Krishna narrates it after he defeats Kamsa and before he goes to school with his guru.)

My name is Lord Krishna. You must be wondering why people worship me. This is because I am the incarnation of the omnipotent and omnipresent, Lord Vishnu. I was born on Earth to rid the evil that King Kamsa, my uncle had planted, and to destroy many demons as the Defender.

I am regarded as the eternally beautiful. My skin is dark and radiant, my eyes are adorable and detailed; my nose is sharp and ready to sniff evil, and my powerful ears are ready to hear the pleas of the innocent. My hands and legs are ready to destroy the monsters in my path; my fingers hold my mystic flute, my toes run and play energetically, and my cherry lips are ready to play tranquil music on the flute.

Yet somehow I often got on the nerves of my mother, Yashoda. I loved to play expressing my naughty and carefree nature. My life did not always revolve around destroying evil. Every day, my friends, Balarama and I stole butter and played in the river Yamuna. I also laugh at the fact that my dearest Uncle once sent his best demons to slay me but they got killed themselves!

I teased and pranked the Gopis, and laughed at the way they would plead with me to stop my antics. However, they never stopped adoring me. Being beautiful was an advantage, you see! I loved all of them but my heart belonged to the one and only, Radha Rani. The way she smiled at me always made my heart proud; whenever she spent time with me, I forgot that time existed. Oh, how I loved those days!

Mathura was not always peaceful. Once, the time had come for me to bring about peace in Mathura. Although the funny part is that evil himself arrived at my doorstep, and I knew that moment. With out hesitation, I fulfilled my duty and freed Mathura from my monster Uncle. Balarama and I were reunited with our parents, Devaki and Vasudeva. It was a glorious moment, and we could not hold our tears. We freed our grandfather, King Ugrasena from those dreadful dungeons, and crowned him again, the rightful king, he was meant to be.

I still miss those memorable days, I spent with my amazing friends, beautiful Radha and my kind foster parents. They played a significant role in my life, shaping me as a Defender. I killed my terrible Uncle Kamsa but I know I have more evil to conquer before I can establish peace in this world.
